Other Notes: Solarized negatives bring out the very dark spots (shadow) in the image and make them very bright. Then turns the bright areas of the negative dark.

Other Notes: On this image I was able to achieve slight solarization somewhat like how one would burn and dodge in a darkroom. By placing the freshly made negative to the sun for a brief moment and covering the parts I didn't want affected I was able to keep my subject 'normal' and the rocks below her solarized.

In 1974 I began a modeling career in fashion and runway that would last until 1994. In 1995 I moved from Indianapolis, IN to New Orleans, LA and met photographer Bryce Lankard who happens to be the first photographer who shot me nude. Bryce and I collaborated on many projects together before I got the idea to start a website dedicated to the fine art nude, artnudes.com. This began the story behind my career as a fine art nude model. Because of the websites popularity and the care devoted to the sanctity of the nude I began working and collaborating with several well known and published photographers such as; Jeff Dunas, Leonard Nimoy, Manuello Paganelli, Sylvie Blum, Carlton Mickle, Bjoern Oldsen and many others who have paved the way for my own photographic explorations which started in October 2000. I have learned many things from these accomplished photographers and thank them all for the lessons they taught me about fine art nude photography. My own work is now being published as well. My photographic artistic expressions come together fluidly when working with the nude form. I work mainly with cheap plastic cameras such as the Holga but I make an exception sometimes for my Nikon FM and my Nikon D70. I have recently fallen in love with the Holgaroid. A Holga with a Polaroid back.

My photographs are printed in editions of 20, signed and dated and archival printed to insure longevity.

I am currently working on a book of Self Portraits and a book devoted to the Holga Camera.
